An aerial architectural rendering of a city development. The scene is split into two contrasting environments. On the left, a dense, lush forest covers a hillside. On the right, a modern urban skyline rises, featuring several tall, cylindrical skyscrapers with distinctive, curved, ribbed facades. The buildings are interspersed with green spaces, walkways, and smaller structures, suggesting a planned, integrated urban environment. The overall tone is monochromatic, using shades of grey and brown, with a bright light source on the right side creating a hazy, atmospheric effect.

Accessible Living That's In Tune with Nature

While its forest setting is a far cry from the hustle and bustle of the city, Pantai Sentral Park is nonetheless thoughtfully located in the centre of Klang Valley's Golden Triangle, between the city centre, Bangsar and Petaling Jaya. It will be connected via future direct flyover from the New Pantai Expressway (NPE), and is linked to other major highways including the Federal Highway, LDP, KL-Putrajaya Expressway, MRR2 and trunks roads such as Jalan Kerinchi and Jalan Templer. Its accessibility is also likely to be boosted in the future with close proximity to the upcoming Circle Line MRT and other existing stations nearby.
